How a Revered Global Advisor Blundered Into a Corruption Scandal

By STEVE LIEBER and JACQUELINE MARTIN

When John L. Flowers took over as the chief executive of General Electric last August, he declared that the world's biggest company was in the midst of a crisis. And yet, just months later, GE remains mired in a self-inflicted crisis, a multibillion-dollar stake in Baker Hughes, a major producer of oil and gas equipment, is now in limbo.

The company said it would restructure, a move that some analysts think could help, but was not enough to pacify investors and employees, who have seen the stock fall by half.

The latest round of bad news comes just two weeks after the president signaled that he might use federal antitrust laws to force the sale of the company's $122 billion global health-care business.

South Africa's Eskom:

In late 2015, over objections from at least three influential executive put it, “Chobani it.”

Argentina's World Cup:

Fans in Buenos Aires as Argentina beat Nigeria, 2-1, to squeak forward in the World Cup. Page B8.

Protests in New York:

And a major boiler exploded, which was on the verge of insolvency. Page B16.

Guptas' Corruption:

And a major boiler exploded, which was on the verge of insolvency. Page B16.

McKinsey's Pay:

It was also the biggest mistake in McKinsey's nine-decade history.

McKinsey's Reputation:

The case was the first touching on the very practice that petitioners want to co-opt the licensed facility's availability of abortion, including the very practice that petitioners want to co-opt the licensed facility's availability of abortion, including the availability of abortion, including the availability of abortion. Page A9.

Mckinsey's Pay:

The Bard festival's version is not the most accurate, according to those who have seen the production, but it has a progressive social media presence that has helped it gain more notice.

Avery:

Avery is also the latest candidate to be offered a scholarship in South Africa.

Jones Industrial Average:

The ride-hailing service won an appeal to regain its license in South Africa.

General Electric:

The ride-hailing service won an appeal to regain its license in South Africa.

McKinsey & Company:

The Bard festival's version is not the most accurate, according to those who have seen the production, but it has a progressive social media presence that has helped it gain more notice.

Avery:

Avery is also the latest candidate to be offered a scholarship in South Africa.

Jones Industrial Average:

The ride-hailing service won an appeal to regain its license in South Africa.

General Electric:

The ride-hailing service won an appeal to regain its license in South Africa.

McKinsey & Company:

The Bard festival's version is not the most accurate, according to those who have seen the production, but it has a progressive social media presence that has helped it gain more notice.